a wearer of the Victoria Cross, who returns home from the recent operations in the Soudan, to exchange the perils and privations of warfare in the desert for a series of sensational incidenta among pleasant English landscapes, and the altimate reward of an ancestral home brightened by the beauty of a comely bride. The plot is well contrived, there is strong individualisation in the characters; the scenes are depicted with clearness and a warm glow of local colour, while is the thrill greater than when Colonel Quaritch unearths the treasure, hidden away from Oromwell's soldiers, the recovery of which saves an ancient house from ruin.

THE very excellent speech made by the Governor at the last meeting of the Legislative Council on the Gambling Ordinance common sense of the community. His Excellency fully recognises the evils of gambling, as every one must do, but he also recognises the difficulty, if not the impossibility of putting a stop to it, and the infew cash in a gambling house is not only an day injustice to the latter, but throws unnecesinveigle dupes into their establishmente gramme:-and to render them liable to imprisonment without the option of a fine is a very proper measure. There is, however, something to of gambling houses if the keeping of such houses is to be illegal. It seems in the first place to violate the fundamental principle of law that all persons present at the commission of a crime and aiding and abetting are to be treated as particeps criminis. There is also the practical objection that the keep. ers of the houses may use the argument that players are not liable to treatment she received in the late typhoon, punishment as an inducement to the public is quite unjured. THE community at large will share the regret expressed by His Excellency the Go- into the matter. vernor in his message of Wednesday last at the approaching retirement of the Hon. J. M. Parce, the Surveyor-General. No officer in the service has been a harder worker than Mr. Perce, and evidences of his skill and artistic taste are to be found on every hand. During his fifteen years' residence in the colony the hon, gentleman has carried out many great and important works, has beautified the town, and in numerous ways has contributed to the convenience, comfort, and health of the inhabitants. When Mr. PRICE leaves he will naturally be the recipient of valedictory addresses and the subject of valedictory notices in the papers; these we will not attempt to anticipate at the present moment, but it would be ungracious to allow the first official notice of the approaching retirement of one to whom the colony owes so much to pass without an expression of regret. The step Mr. Paron is now taking has been in contemplation for some time, but has been delayed until the completion of his great City of New York seroes the Atlantic and will provide the town with an abundant sup.

But perhaps the largest and most profitable field for the investment of capital in Borneo is for tobacco, for the very obvious reason that the profits on its successful culture are so enormous. In urging the claims of North Borneo for this purpose it must be borne in mind that the area of land on the globe is extremely limited where the highest class leaf tobacco for cigar covers can be grown. This class of tobacco requires an equal temperature and a constant and regular

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C. A TALE OF COUNTRY LIFE, BY H. RIDER HAGGARD.

AUTHOR OF "KING SOLOMON'S MINES," "ALLAN QUATERMAIN," "JESS." 'She," &c., &c. Now First Published.

Mr. Quest has his Innings. All that afternoon and far into the evening Mr. Quest was employed in drafting, and with his own hand ongrossing on parchment certain deeds, to the proper execution of which he seemed to find constant reference necessary to a tin box of papers labelled "Honham Castle Estates." By eleven that night everything was finished, and having carefully collected and docketed his papers, he put the tin box away and went home to bed.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Next morning, about ten o'clock, Edward Consey was sitting at broakfast in no happy frame of mind. He had gone up to the castle to dinner on the previous evening, but it cannot be said that he had enjoyed himself. Ida was there, looking very handsome in her evening dress, but she was cold as a stone and unapproachable as a statue. She scarcely spoke to him, indeed, ercept in answer to some direct remark, reserving all her conversation for her father, who seemed to have conglit the contagion of restraint, and was, for him, unusually silent and depressed. But once or twice he found her looking at him, and then there was upon her face a mingled expression of contempt and irrepressible aversion, which chilled him to the marrow. These qualities towards him were indeed so much more plainly developed than they had been before, that at last a conviction which he had at first rejected as incredible, forced itself into his mind. That conviction was, that Belle must have disbelieved his denial of the engagement, faint, but there was but one thing to be done, and that was to face it out. Once when the Squire's back was turned he ventured to attempt some little tenderness in which the word "dear" occurred, but Ida did not seem to hear it and looked straight over his head into space, and this he felt was trying. So trying did he find the whole entertainment indeed that about halfpast nine he rose, and came away saying that he had some bank papers which must be attended to that night. Now most men would in all human probability have been dismayed by this state of affairs into relinquishing an attempt at matrimony which it was evident could only be carried through in the face of the quiet but none the less vigorous dislike and contempt of the other contracting party. But this was not so with Edward Cossey. Ida's coldness exercised upon his tenacious and obstinate mind much the same effect that may be supposed to be produced upon the benighted seeker for the North Pole by a frezen ocean of icebergs. Like the explorer he was convinced that if once he could get over those cold and frowning heights he would find a smiling and sunny land beyond and perchance many other delights, and like the explorer again, he was, metaphorically, ready to die in the effort. For to tell the truth he loved her more every day, till now his passion dominated his physical being and his mental judgment, so that whatever loss was entailed, whatever obstacles arose, he was determined to enduro and overcome them if by so doing he might gain his end He was reflecting upon all this on the morning in question when Mr. Quest, looking very cool to his room, much as Colonel Quaritch had been then you can go," and she did so and went. shown in two mornings before. "How do you do, Quest?" he said, in a from high to low kind of tone, which he was in the habit of adopting towards his official subordinates. "Sit down. What is it?" "It is some business, Mr. Cossey," the lawyer answered in his usual quiet tones.

- Honham Castle mortgages again, I suppose," growled he, "I only hope you don't want any more money on that account at present, that's all: because I can traise another cent while the Governor lives, for they don't entail cash and bank shares, you know, and though my credit's pretty good I am not far from the bottom of it." " Well," said Mr. Quest, with a faint smile, "it has to do with the Honham Castle mortgages but as I have a good deal to say, perhaps we had better wait till the things are cleared away." " All right. Just ring the boll, will you, and take a civarette r" Mr. Quest smiled again and rang the bell, but did not take the cigarette. When the breakfast things had been removed he took a chair, and placing it on the further side of the table in such a position that the light, which was to his back, struck full upon Edward Cossey's fice, commenced to deliberately until and sort his bundle of papers. Presently he came to the one he wanted-a letter. It was not an original letter, but a copy. "Will you kindly read this, Mr. Cossey ?." he said quietly, as he pushed the letter towards him across the table. Edward finished lighting his oigarette, and then took the letter up and glanced at it carelessly. At the first line, however, his expression changed to one of absolute horror, his face blanched, the perspiration aprang out upon his forehead, and the cigarette dropped from his fingers to the carpet, where it lay smouldering. And no wonder, for the letter was a copy of one of Belle's most passionate epistles to himself. He had never been able to restrain her from writing these compromising letters. Indeed, this one was the very same that some little time before Mr. Quest had abstracted from the pocket of his
